

MATHEMATICS

Department

Math is more than a numbers game. Studying math builds analytical and problem-solving skills, and is increasingly important for a variety of careers in today's data-driven workplace.

Occupations

Mathematics are central to a range of jobs in today's complex and data-rich work environments. Mathematics graduates can undertake further study to work at research and development laboratories, or enter fields such as statistical research, data analysis, finance and economics, and public health.

- Data scientists
- Computer programmers
- Financial managers
- Statisticians
- Mathematics teachers
